Questions 10 to 14

Tapioca pearls are small, round balls that are commonly used in desserts and drinks. They are made from tapioca starch, which is derived from the cassava root. Cassava is a type of root vegetable that grows in many parts of the world. It has a brown, rough exterior and a white, starchy interior.

The first step in making tapioca pearls is preparing the tapioca starch. This is done by grinding the cassava roots into fine powder, which is then mixed with water to create dough. The dough is then rolled into small balls, about the size of a small pea. The balls are then boiled in hot water for several minutes until they become soft and translucent.

Once the tapioca pearls are cooked, they are rinsed in cold water to remove any excess starch and to cool them down. Sometimes, additional flavours or colours may be added to the tapioca pearls, such as fruit juice or food colouring.

Tapioca pearls are often added to desserts like puddings and custards to add a chewy texture. They are also commonly used in bubble tea, a popular Taiwanese drink that includes milk, tea and flavoured syrups.
